I am a professional and dedicated individual with extensive enterprise, travel, and arts program management experience in a variety of organizations from small start-up firms to large multinational companies and government organizations. I am adept at identifying and securing partners that meet the criteria for each project and negotiating all contractual terms and conditions to ensure compliance and success. I am an effective leader who clearly understands the importance of empowerment in the team dynamic where the playing field is constantly shifting; requiring effective multi-tasking and the reassessment of priorities.

As a storyteller, curator and creative economy consultant, I made my way to Pueblo, Colorado in 2010 via Tokyo to join a team of innovative physicians in the launch of a network of medical clinics in Colorado and Texas. As the company's first and only Director of Creative Solutions, my assignment was to fold into the new culture the Eastern aesthetic of wellness --- balancing mind, body and spirit and the elimination of abandonment in the delivery of healthcare. While living in Pueblo, I immediately realized the powerful and yet untold story of the creative economy in one of America's great industrial landscapes which was once dominated by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company and such industrialists as Ben Guggenheim and John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

I am the founder and owner of the award-winning Kadoya Gallery in Pueblo and since my arrival in Southern Colorado I have responded to the needs of creatives through the launch of The Shoe Factory, the ARTery and the Underground in the Historic Federal Building. As a branding and marketing specialist in the arts and creative economy, I am in the process of developing a new methodology called the Tray of Life to help creatives amplify the narrative of their story. I plan to release my first major storytelling effort Jackie & the Taj which tells the powerful and compelling story of First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy's historic trip to India in 1962.
